The Chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee and the Chairman, Subcommittee on Seapower and Strategic and Critical Materials, House Armed Services Committee, have requested GAO to evaluate the methodology and planning factors used in a recent National Security Council study on stockpile planning. The Chairmen have also asked GAO to compile the views of each federal agency department or agency providing input to or comments on the study.

On September 10, 1985, the National Security Council provided a background briefing on the various segments of the study. One of the segments, entitled "Political Reliability", was presented by [REDACTED] We were told that the CIA was responsible for this segment. We would like to discuss CIA's input to and comments on the study with [REDACTED] and any other CIA representatives who may have been involved in those efforts.
